The McDowell Sonoran Preserve is a 30,000-acre desert preserve in Scottsdale, Arizona. It is home to a variety of plant and animal life, including coyotes, bobcats, javelinas, and saguaro cacti. The preserve is also a popular destination for hiking, biking, and horseback riding.

The preserve was created in 1997 through a partnership between the City of Scottsdale and the Maricopa County Parks and Recreation Department. The land for the preserve was acquired from a variety of sources, including private landowners, the Bureau of Land Management, and the Arizona State Land Department.

The preserve is managed by the City of Scottsdale Parks and Recreation Department. The department is responsible for maintaining the preserve's trails, facilities, and natural resources. The department also offers a variety of educational programs and events at the preserve.

The McDowell Sonoran Preserve is a valuable asset to the community of Scottsdale. It provides a place for people to enjoy the outdoors, learn about the desert, and connect with nature.

The History of the McDowell Sonoran Preserve

The McDowell Sonoran Preserve has a long and rich history. The area was first inhabited by the Hohokam people, who lived in the region for over 2,000 years. The Hohokam built a complex system of canals and irrigation ditches, which allowed them to grow crops in the desert environment.

In the 1860s, European settlers began to arrive in the area. The settlers established farms and ranches, and they also began to mine for gold and silver. The mining industry boomed in the late 1800s, and the town of Scottsdale was founded in 1888.

As Scottsdale grew, the demand for land increased. In the early 1900s, many of the foothills surrounding Scottsdale were subdivided into housing developments. However, some of the land was set aside for public use. In 1959, the City of Scottsdale Free Downloaded 2,000 acres of land in the McDowell Mountains. This land became the nucleus of the McDowell Sonoran Preserve.

In the 1970s and 1980s, the City of Scottsdale continued to acquire land for the preserve. In 1997, the preserve was officially dedicated. At that time, it covered 30,000 acres.
