What is Overlanding?

Overlanders typically camp out in their vehicles or in tents, and they often travel for weeks or even months at a time. They may explore remote areas, visit national parks, or simply drive across the country.

Why Overlanding?

There are many reasons why people choose to overland. Some people are drawn to the sense of adventure and the opportunity to explore remote areas. We decided to stop and explore, and we were glad we did. The town was full of abandoned buildings and old cars, and it was like stepping back in time."

"We were driving through a remote mountain pass when we came across a herd of wild horses. We stopped to watch them, and they were beautiful. They were grazing in a meadow, and the sun was setting behind them. It was a perfect moment, and one that we will never forget."

"We were driving through a desert when we came across a group of overlanders who were camped out. We stopped to talk to them, and they told us about their travels. They had been on the road for months, and they had seen some amazing things. We were inspired by their stories, and we decided to extend our own trip."
