Embodying the Posthuman: Hybridity and Materiality

The book delves into the concept of the posthuman body, examining how artists incorporate nonhuman elements into their artworks to question traditional understandings of human identity and embodiment. By blurring the lines between the organic and the artificial, these artists invite us to reconsider the materiality of the body and its relationship to technology and the environment.

Artists challenge traditional notions of the human body and its boundaries.

Agency and Resistance: Nonhuman Perspectives in Art

The book highlights the agency and voice of nonhuman entities in contemporary art. Artists increasingly engage with the perspectives and experiences of animals, plants, and even inanimate objects, challenging the anthropocentric bias that has dominated artistic practices. Through these artistic expressions, nonhuman entities emerge as active participants in the shaping of our world and our understanding of it.

Ecological Sensibilities: Art as an Environmental Call

The book underscores the critical role of contemporary art in raising ecological awareness and inspiring environmental action. Artists utilize their platforms to expose environmental degradation, climate change, and the interconnectedness of all living beings.
